FLAME RESISTANT PROTECTION

Everyday work clothes can ignite, burn or melt when exposed to electric arc flash, flash fires or other heat-related hazards.

The extent of a burn injury can be substantially reduced if wearing the correct FR garments. Be sure to know the standards before selecting the product required for your work environment.

ARC FLASH PROTECTION

NFPA 70E: STANDARD FOR ELECTRICAL SAFETY IN THE WORKPLACE

This standard defines the guidelines for Electrical Safety in the Workplace. It addresses the electrical safety requirements for employees in the worksite, such as safe work practices and PPE (Personal Protective Equipment), which includes arc rated clothing based upon the incident energy associated with the specific task. An arc flash heat can achieve high temperatures, so the standard's categories of hazard (rank PPE1 to PPE4) are directly related to the level of protection.

To define the level of protection that an FR fabric provides, the material needs to be tested following the ASTM F 1959 Standard. This test defines the ATPV (Arc thermal performance value) which indicates the level of protection provided by the FR fabric. The higher the number, the greater the protection.

PPE1		ATPV minimum 4 cal/cm ²	PPE2		ATPV minimum 8 cal/cm ²
PPE3		ATPV minimum 25 cal/cm ²	PPE4		ATPV minimum 40 cal/cm ²

ENA NENS 09-2014:

This is a guideline for the selection and maintenance of PPE for electric arc hazards. While not a standard, this has been set up by The Energy Networks Association (ENA) to provide a comprehensive guide to minimum levels of PPE required to protect workers against electrical hazards in Australia.

FLASH FIRE PROTECTION

NFPA 2112: STANDARD ON FLAME-RESISTANT GARMENTS FOR PROTECTION OF INDUSTRIAL PERSONNEL AGAINST FLASH FIRE

This standard defines the guidelines for Flame Resistant Garments for Protection of Industrial Personnel Against Flash Fire. It specifies the minimum performance requirements, test methods for flame-resistant fabrics and components, designs, and certification requirements. indicates the level of protection provided by the FR fabric.
